In the current globalized economy, competition is no longer between organizations, it's between supply chains. Hence, supply chain management (SCM) has become one of the core elements of an organization's competitiveness. As key links in SCM, logistics managers, freight forwarders, warehouse managers, and distribution managers play a crucial role in the smooth functioning of an entire supply chain, which in turn helps to reduce costs, increase efficiency, and improve customer satisfaction. Realizing the significance of logistics and supply chain management, the Government of Bangladesh has recently developed its first-ever National Logistics Policy, which supports developing a supply chain strategy for individual organizations. Therefore, business leaders in the logistics industry are increasingly seeking skills and competencies in managers needed to manage supply chain connectivity, enhance efficiency, promote sustainability, and satisfy customers' expectations. This course intends to develop skills and knowledge in supply chain and logistics domain.
